Professor Adrian Smith, Science Policy Research Unit,
University of Sussex, UK

Adrian Smith is a Professor of Technology & Society at the Science Policy Research Unit at the University of Sussex. His research analyses the politics and governance of innovation for sustainable development. Recent projects have included an international collaboration studying 'grassroots innovation' for sustainability arising in civil society settings in Europe, India and Latin America, and published in the book, Grassroots Innovation Movements. Current projects are looking at makerspaces as sites for redistributing and transforming innovation for sustainability.
